TURKEY FOR TAFT'S DINNER

In the center, the biggest turkey for the biggest President; on the right, the same turkey in the arms of Horatio Vose, the veteran turkey breeder of Westerly, R. I.; on the left, the Taft turkey for 1909, photographed as he is being weighed in by Mr. Vose. The bird was weighed once a week during the fattening process, and when this photograph was taken weighed 40 pounds.

PROUDLY strutting about on a farm near Westerly, R. I., for the past month, carefully nurtured and provided with every luxury that the most aristocratic of fowls could hope for, there has been a stately gobbler whose epicurean tendencies slowly but surely dragged him beneath the headman's axe. Unconscious of his danger, he played the role of the gourmand day in and day out, greedily devouring the specially prepared dainties placed before him, while his former companions gazed enviously and longingly through the wire screen that separated him from their doomed companions.

But doomed he was, and while his end was not a happy one, it was at least an honorable one. For Mr. Gobbler has been selected to appear as the principal item on the ball of fare at the White House on Thanksgiving day. So, stripped of his feathers, deprived of his head and covered with a coat of brown gravy, this martyr to the Thanksgiving day appetite will adorn the table in the Taft household, while his plump and well-rounded form will be reduced to bare bones. But his history is an interesting one, as he is the largest turkey to grace the White House table in forty years.

When old Horatio Vose, a farmer residing near Westerly, R. I., who has supplied the presidential turkeys at Thanksgiving time for the past forty years, started out to make his selection this year, he had in mind the fact that President Taft was not only the biggest chief executive the United States ever had, but was also a connoisseur on the dainties of the table. He read with interest the daily columns in the newspapers telling of the specially prepared dishes for Mr. Taft at the numerous banquets tendered him on his recent swing around the country; and this served to increase his caution in making the selection.

After days of vain search through the surrounding territory, which is one of the most noted turkey-raising sections in the country, he finally picked a tall but rather lean bird. Then began the process of fattening. Corn—the full kernels—walnuts, pecans, and all manner of highly nutritive foods were spread before his lordship several times a day. And as often did he devour them. This noble fowl was evidently not familiar with this ancient classic: "Are you going to the big Thanksgiving dinner?" asked the duck.

When on the garden walk the Turk met her.

"I suppose I am, unless I get some thinner, hang the luck!"

The Turk said, "but he hasn't axed me yet."

Gradually the bird rounded into form, and when the above photograph was taken two weeks before his demise, he weighed 40 pounds. The typical New England home-steed and acreage to Washington.

THE MAN FROM HOME.

It is said that "The Man From Home," seen at the Shubert theatre last night, was received in Chicago, where it was first presented, with almost religious enthusiasm. It expresses the spirit of life in the middle west better perhaps than any book or play that has been written. The essence of American character and temperament are exemplified in the person of Daniel Voorhees Pike. In contrast with the foreign types and the certain crudities of manner, the American wins the hearts and sympathies of the audience, a man when they see one, especially an American gentleman.

The Russian grand duke says of Pike: "I call him an egotist because he is what he is; he will not pretend to be anyone else." That is a fortunate assumption of his simple, sincere character. He represents the best type of American people, and in some way typifies America's highest national ideal.

Though seen for the first time in this city, the fame of this play has preceded it, and a large audience, with enthusiasm, the excellent presentation of last night. Wonders were wrought with the stage appointments, and in spite of the handicap of limited space, some very charming scenic effects were produced. The orchestra came in for a share of the appreciation. Prof. J. J. McClellan's personal popularity as well as pleasure in the music were evidenced by frequent applause. One number, "The Serenade," was especially timely and enjoyable.

The company playing "The Man From Home" is excellent. Henry Hall gives a very true interpretation of the role of Daniel Voorhees Pike. If he overdoes the drooping of the Indian man, it is forgotten when he rises to the more serious demands of the part. His personality is pleasing and his voice and smile are delightful. In contrast to the effete Englishman, he is a prince.

Next in popularity is the Russian grand duke, Pike, the guardian, opposes the marriage because he believes the Englishman to be unworthy. He exposes the father and with the duke's aid saves an escaped Siberian prisoner. Also he saves the girl from an unhappy marriage and wins her back to America and to himself.

It was to be expected that "The Man From Home" would meet with the success here that it has had throughout the east, especially as it is presented by a superior company. It is one of the best of American plays on the stage today, and the city is fortunate in having it presented here. It may be seen for the remaining nights of the week and matinees today and Saturday.

SALT LAKE THEATRE.

The long-expected production of Victor Herbert's comic opera, "The Serenade," will open at the Salt Lake theatre this afternoon at 2:15. Much interest is manifested in the appearance of the home singers in this popular opera.

"IN OLD KENTUCKY."

"In Old Kentucky" is announced for presentation here next Monday at the Salt Lake theatre for four nights and on Wednesday a bargain matinee will be given, and this means a general turning-out of theatre-goers, young and old, for "In Old Kentucky" makes a stronger appeal than the average theatrical attraction.

HORSESHOE PRINT BERAYS BURGLAR

By means of a horseshoe print in the mud near the Fluff Rug company, at Fourth North and Second West streets, the police have caught the alleged perpetrator of the wholesale burglary of that factory Monday night, and have recovered many stolen rugs, valued at several hundred dollars. Baar, living at Ninth North and Jordan river, and Dan Groo, a neighbor, are lodged in the city jail charged with the burglary.

Groo has confessed, and last night accompanied the officers to a secluded spot on the Jordan river, where the rug amounting to a wagonload, were cached. Searching around the rug plant Tuesday morning, following the report of the theft, Mounted Officer J. A. Conyers came upon a peculiar horseshoe print of a horse-shoe in the mud near the rug plant, from which the rugs were removed from the store room. No horse belonging to the company had been in that vicinity since the day before. Taking up the trail, Conyers followed the tracks with difficulty to the spot where the rugs were cached. Baar, by unguarded statements, had implicated Groo, and the latter, after several hours in the city jail, broke down and confessed.

According to his story they had driven in Baar's rig to the Fluff Rug plant late Monday night. Entering through a rear window, they loaded the small wagon with the choicest rugs they could find, and drove to the spot where the rugs were cached. Baar, by unguarded statements, had implicated Groo, and the latter, after several hours in the city jail, broke down and confessed.

Arrested Detective in Fraud Charge

Federal authorities in San Francisco are looking up the record of George Y. Hardacre who served several months as a bandman for the Fifteenth Infantry at Fort Douglas under the assumed name of George Y. Murray, until October 6 of the present year, when he deserted. Hardacre was charged with defrauding the United States government out of pension money. For two years Hardacre is alleged to have been drawing a pension of $17 a month as a disabled bluejacket, and at the same time serving as an able-bodied soldier. He is being held for the military authorities on several charges, including his desertion from the local post.

Upon leaving the navy two years ago, Hardacre managed to pass muster as a disabled bluejacket, and drew his pension regularly. Under an assumed name he obtained employment with a large dry goods firm at Oakland, Cal., continuing to draw his pension. Special Pension Examiner E. G. Hursh happened to make a purchase in the store when he saw Hardacre. The arrest followed.

Smart Young Man Found Standing On His Head.

A slight not often seen, that of a gentlemanly youth standing on his head, was the cause of a very large crowd yesterday morning. It seems from evidence gleaned on the spot that this young man had opened a copy of an Eastern paper and read the following (which had been printed upside down).

MANUFACTURERS' DAY OFFERS

Police Department Does Some Real Sleuthing and Captures Miscreants.

Although the second day's attendance at the Greater Salt Lake food and industrial exposition did not equal the capacity mark, the auditorium on Richards street, especially during the evening hours, was well thronged with its constantly moving streams of visitors and patrons.

Perhaps one of the most attractive features of the exposition is its cleanliness and quick and efficient condition. There is nothing tawdry about the exhibits, either in the show of the materials or goods or in the manner of their presentation. The booths with their decorations are all new, the prettiest white of many of them being made more effective in the contrast with the dark color of the decorations.

Yesterday was shoppers' and Salt Lake day, and the crowd took advantage of the opportunity given for the inspection of home-made goods.

Today will be one of the big feature days of the exposition. It will be manufacturers' day. During the afternoon and evening each visitor will be given a number of coupons entitling the holder to a chance in the drawing of over 130 prizes donated by the manufacturers. The prizes to be given are on display to the left of the main entrance.

The drawing will be held at 10 o'clock at night and the award made at the same time.

As a means of attracting further interest in the exposition it was announced last night by Manager A. J. Tromp that beginning today the admission price will be reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, and this admission will prevail during the remainder of the fair.

Prizes for Babies.

Friday afternoon will be "baby" day, and there are to be fifteen prizes distributed among the most popular babies in the exposition on that day. The Boyd Park Jewelry company has donated three handsome silver cups for the first three prizes. The cups are now on exhibition in the jewelry window, and in addition to them there will be twelve other prizes offered by the management. The contest will be determined by vote, each visitor being given a ballot to mark for his or her favorite baby.

A. J. Lerch, sales agent for the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes company, is also going to take a hand in the appreciation of the babies, and show his fondness for them by giving to each of the little tots a package of the Kellogg company's cereal to be the center of attraction on baby day.

Friday night will be given over to the Elks, and on that occasion the booths in the auditorium will be decorated in the purple colors of the order. A souvenir hand-painted tray, bearing a magnificent elk's head, will be given to each lady attending.

A unique feature to be obtained for Saturday night will be the public marriage of Mon San and Lee Lung, Chinese.

In the musical program, Charles McFadden is proving to be one of the hits with his inimitable whistling solos, and he is required to respond to numerous encores.

The various booths draw general attention, although scattered along the different aisles are those who hold crowds with the attractiveness of the exhibit. The exhibit of Peet's soaps is one of those with its variety and assortment of sweet-scented toilet articles.

Log Cabin maple syrups and the new Presto prunes, in adjoining booths, furnish a sweet morsel for the visitors. The gas company shows how easy it is
